

Last year a new council initiative launched to support local business and address concerns in our town centre. They're putting together a think tank of business owners and local organisations, BARA included, to put ideas together to make our high street a better place for everyone.

In 2019 Waltham Forest become London's first Borough of Culture, with Leytonstone hosting Africa Xpress and the Leytonstone Film Festival, along with regular community driven favourites such as the Arts Trail and the Jumble Trail. Waltham Forest Council organised events to update businesses on the year's activity and other town centre issues. Driven by a desire to support the town centre, a smaller working group of businesses began to meet to discuss forming a Town Team, a concept which is gaining in popularity which is gaining in popularity.

Town Teams have already been running around the world and work on the premise of passionate businesses, residents and community groups joining forces to make their area a better place to live, shop and work. Volunteer based, members bring a varied set of skills, acting as 'local experts', with support from their local Council. In Leytonstone the current participants offer experience of sustainable retail, marketing, community and social enterprise, design and architecture, but more input is welcomed in order to develop the initiative further.

The aim of the Town Team is to lead grassroots improvements, alongside bigger regeneration projects facilitated by Waltham Forest Council or third parties.

Emerging plans for 2020 in Leytonstone include developing a programme of activity to animate the town, support businesses and attract investment. There is a strong desire to build on the success of the Single Use Plastic reduction pilot in high street businesses, and to build on aspirations around sustainability. But first the Town Team will meet to explore what can be improved and where; opportunities to broaden the group out to others; and development of an action plan with agreed milestones. BARA have been invited to be involved with the Town Team and will be keeping residents up to date on developments, things to look forward to and will represent residents interests. Do you think you could add something to the mix? If so, please contact business.growth@ walthamforest.gov.uk to register your inter-

Note From The Chair

Well, here we are in a new decade, and so far it's been decidedly blustery. Some of the local foliage has been taking a hammering in a series of brutal storms, but I'm hoping that spring will see everything bursting back into life. Speaking of which, it's the ideal time of year to start thinking about our annual front garden competition - more on that in a future issue.

Undeterred by the indulgence of the festive period, we enjoyed the opportunity to combine our AGM with a winter members' party. This hybrid format certainly seems like a popular choice, as evidenced by the great turnout. Our thanks as always go to turnout. Our thanks, as always, go to Shah who was our gracious host for the evening at Stone Pizzeria.

Looking to the months ahead, there's another of our hugely popular quizzes coming up on March 19th, and an Easter Egg hunt in Henry Reynolds' Gardens on the 29th. On Sunday 5th April, we'll be having another litter pick in conjunction with LBWF's own clean-up cămpaign. As always, at the start of a new year,

As always, at the start of a new year, we'd like to remind you to renew your membership if you haven't already. There are several ways to do this - which you'll find plenty of information on in this very issue. Failing that, and weather-permitting, we'll be getting out and about to do some door-knocking on the 14th and 15th of March. As well as making it easier than ever to renew as making it easier than ever to renew your membership, it's another great way of getting to know your BARA committee!

Enjoy the spring and I hope to see you

BARA AGM

A new Leytonstone venue hosted the very well attended BARA 2020 annual AGM last month.

Every organisation needs an AGM, but most members would tell you that it's rarely a highlight in anyone's social diary. They can be rather dry affairs, which is why we decided to change up the format a couple of years ago by combining the AGM with our annual member's party. This way, we get to keep the admin to a minimum, and spend much more time getting to know the membership.

This year's AGM was hosted at Stone Pizzeria, the latest culinary addition to the High Street, and Italy's favourite dish was clearly a popular choice. Shah and his team laid on an impressive spread of pizzas, with vegetarian, vegan and gluten free options, so everyone had something to suit their palate.

This year also saw some passionate discussion of issues facing the local area, from a debate about BARA's role in community consultations, to considerations about how we might ensure that our membership feels representative of local diversity.

We'd like to thank everyone who turned up, took part in the discussion, and especially all of those who voiced their thanks to the committee for their work. We don't do any of this for the plaudits, but it's always lovely to feel appreciated by members.

The original Filly Brook, housed in the cute little premises next to the station, is a distant memory. They've been planning a comeback ever since. Annette Loakes takes a look inside the all new Filly Brook

From their pop-up at Leytonstone tube station in May 2015 to a newly refurbished location on the corner of Drayton Road and Grove Green Road the Filly Brook team have come a long way. They managed to test their approach in 2015 and spent a long time looking for the right location that could encapsulate their vision. A new Filly Brook bar based in Leytonstone and run by local residents takes their original concept of providing a cool, bright fresh space that combines an offer of high quality locally procured drink and food (eventually) with great music and a bright contemporary community space.

Simon and his team have turned what was a local nursery into a modern comfortable space for the entire community. When BARA was invited to one of the 'soft launch' events in February we were tempted by the 18 plus beers on tap, many produced locally. They also offered a small but interesting wine list, which they hope to eventually grow. Again they have tried to source a locally produced wine, not an easy task in the east-end of London.

The corner building itself has been transformed from an uninviting, dull space into a new sleek Nordic style lodge structure. The bar will eventually include a large outside space for customer's use. Inside presents as spacious and inviting with a clean Scandinavian feel very different to other local bars. There is a lot of attention to detail here and considerable effort to think of their customer's entire experience. The vision for the bar is very deliberate, the new owner wanted to create the sort of place that him and his wife would enjoy hanging-out to eat and drink. When fully up and running the Filly Brook team also want to open during the day to offer tea/coffee and food. Local Bushwooders may fancy a short walk over the other side of the tracks to check it out. We think you won't be disappointed. We wish the Filly Brook team all future success on their new business venture!

Andrew Shields explores the origins of the Bushwood estate and finds Victorian builders deploying the same marketing tricks as property developers today

An article in the Telegraph a few years ago declared that 'Posh houses don't have numbers, let alone the dreaded word "street" in the address. There is definitely the snob factor of having a home with an aspirational name.' The article went on to claim that 'a regal title could add up to £30,000 to the value of a house'. Is this a new phenomenon? Not at all: the enterprising builders of Bushwood were at it more than a century earlier.

On 19 August 1863, readers of the Essex Standard will have turned to a dramatic head-line: 'Fire at Leyspring Hall'. 'The police and neighbours succeeded in removing many valuable paintings and a great quantity of furniture,' the paper reported. 'The fire had, however, made fearful progress and every room presented one tremendous sheet of flame.' The property, sadly, was gutted.

News of the blaze spread widely. It even merited a mention in the 'Fashionable Chronicle' column of that week's Brighton Guardian, no doubt due to the owner of Leyspring Hall being the recently deceased 5th Earl of Mornington – son of the infamous spendthrift William Pole-Tylney-Long-Wellesley, whose calamitous lifestyle had led to the demolition of Wanstead House.

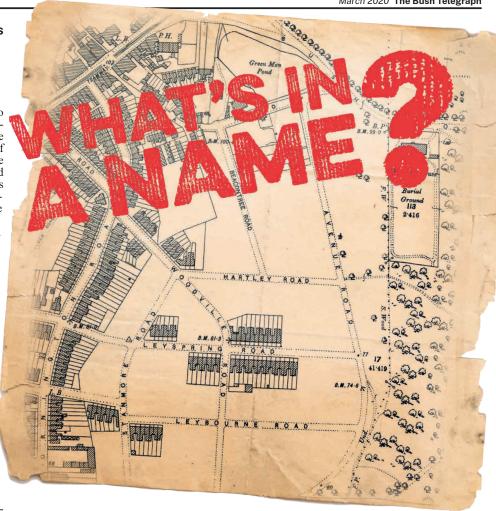

Whether destroyed by flames or sacrificed simply for profit, countless country houses around London were sold for development in this period as a growing population and the spread of the railways increased demand. Leyspring Hall, built early in the 18th century, home from 1804 of John Coope, brewer of the firm Ind Coope & Co and then from 1828 of Nicholas Charrington of the Mile End Brewery, was no different.

In great demand

Local newspapers reveal how the once-grand estates around Leytonstone were divided into parcels to attract what the East London Observer, in an 1866 advert for plots off Leytonstone Road, described as 'builders and speculating capitalists'.

Parts of the Leyspring Hall site first went under the hammer from 1878. On 16 May 1884, Messrs Hyde, Tandy & Mahon, solicitors acting for the vendor, advertised a sale at the Red Lion of 40 plots which 'overlook Epping Forest and are admirably adapted for small villas'. A week later, another 20 plots were up for sale. In July 1902, the executors of the nearby Carlton House estate staged another sale at the Red Lion, this time of 'eight blocks of building land totalling 52 plots in the ABC roads' (Aylmer, Barfield and Carlton). According to solicitors Protheroe & Morris, the site was 'absolutely ripe for the erection of small houses, which are in great demand in this neighbourhood'. Leytonstone's country estate carve-up was nearly complete and the Bushwood estate as we now know it was taking shape.

One of the 'speculating capitalists' was Charlotte Augusta Dring Knighton, a wealthy widow from St. Leonard's-on-Sea in Sussex. She bought land between Hartley Road and Leyspring Road and in 1896 sold the plot for my own family's house to William Peter Griggs and John William Howard Thompson. The latter was a solicitor, the former an archetypal Victorian self-made man who rose from lowly origins as a Thames barge operator to achieve wealth and social prominence as a builder and developer. Peter Griggs was elected to Ilford Council in 1899, to Essex County Council in 1901, was knighted in 1916 and elected MP for Ilford two years later. His company, WP Griggs & Co, constructed more than 2,000 houses in Ilford alone and played a major role in the development of Upminster and Wanstead.

Inducements to buy

As rows of broadly identical terraced houses sprang up across suburban east London, developers needed to find ways to make their properties stand out. Griggs later remarked that "it had been very difficult to keep things going. The firm has to give even more to people in the shape of improvements to induce them to buy."

One such popular device was the use of as-

Man of Sidon

My house name research began when I wanted to uncover the first occupants of our family home. The 1901 census shows the head of the household was John William Fielder, born in Clerkenwell in 1846, who had spent much of his early career in the Merchant Navy. By 1891 he had come ashore and was working as a pilot in the Docks. John, together with wife Rosa, sons Henry and Leonard and daughter Florence, moved from Freemasons Road in Canning Town to the newly-built house named Sidon in Hartley Road –an aptly-named property for a man of the sea.

By 1911, Henry and Florence had left home and the remaining three moved again, to 32 Cowley Road. In their place came Arthur Edgar Luscombe, a solicitor's managing clerk, wife Florence, two daughters and a son – a mirror image of my own family living in our house more than a hundred years later. pirational names for the houses being built. By applying some imagination, builders could make every purchaser feel their property was in fact unique. While a number of houses around the estate were given names, Hartley, Becontree Road and Bushwood were the last three roads to be fully developed and, as the 1901 census reveals, they're the only ones on which almost all the properties originally had names rather than numbers.

The method of selling parcels of land meant that many roads were created piecemeal, as a builder sold one block of houses to fund the construction of another. In 1891, Hartley Road consisted of just three numbered houses, still identifiable by their flat façade. Other than two square-bayed houses which were infilled at a later date, it's probable that the long terraces with identical angled window bays comprising the rest of Hartley Road were built in the late 1890s by WP Griggs & Co – and that it was the energetic marketeers from this company who gave the names to almost all the houses.

Fads and fancies

While researching her recent book 'Sunnyside: A Sociolinguistic History of British House Names', Dr Laura Wright of Cambridge University grouped the names given to Victorian properties according to their derivation:

- Names of places people might aspire to visit
- Rural nostalgia, such as trees and plant names
- Commemorative names, often military, such as Balaclava, Alma or Raglan
- Literary names, many from Sir Walter Scott novels like Ivanhoe, Waverley or Kenilworth
- Names with royal connections: Tudor, Osborne, Ventnor or Shanklin

Bushwood Kerbstones

Look down and you may notice a street feature that might have passed you by. Bushwood's Sybil Ritten has been pondering the kerbstone conundrum

A few years ago I noticed some old granite kerbstones were being replaced in areas by narrower white machine cut stones from China and became interested in a street scape that we all usually walk over without noticing. This roadside is characterized by light grey hand hewn granite kerb stone 30 cm by 90cm and the gutter being lined by a double row of smaller dark grey stones Kerbstones in the BARA area were probably quarried in the Midlands as were most in North and North East London. and brought to London initially by canal boats and then the railways. These stones were hand-hewn and as the granite is quite hard, less uniform in sizing and shape. I also noticed a few mysterious symbols carved into two stones in Bushwood and subsequently we have found a third in Harvey road. Maybe there are more to be found....if you look down! There are various theories as to the meaning of these symbols e.g. Mason or quarry identifying symbols, boundary marks and some lettered symbols may relate to utilities.

If you are going to record all the symbols in the area as a project, ideally you need to photograph from above and include a parking line or other object for scale/ date/ location e.g. street name/conditions wet or dry/ author/rock type in our area usually igneous granite rock. See kerb survey reference for more details.

Below are the source articles if you wanted to read up a bit more about this small but interesting geological history of our streets.

 Latest fads, often again from popular novels, such as Gothic or Abbotsford

 'Pick and mix' names: Strathmead, Penthwaite, Inverdeen or Hursthome

 Onto which might be added 'Villa', 'Cottage' or 'Lodge' according to the size and quality of the development.

The Hackney Society have researched property names in that area and found similar characteristics: 'The emulation of the royalty and aristocracy; the assertion of a rural dream of suburban life; the description of local sites and amenities; perhaps even an element of romantic medievalism. The patriotism of the Victorian builders shows through directly in names like Albion Grove or more obliquely in others commemorating colonial occupation like Freetown Cottage. Equally obvious is their social snobbery, seen especially in early and mid-Victorian names like Hertford Villas.'

Castles, cathedrals and Welsh whimsy

What, then, of Hartley Road? By using census records to map the house names to the numbers used later, I have been able to identify every property. They certainly fit both Laura Wright's and the Hackney Society's groupings

Our neighbours at the turn of the last century may not have visited Camelford or Trevose, St Ives, Rothesay or Melrose, but they might well have read about them. Carisbrook (without the 'e'), Durham and Bohemia will have conjured images of castles and cathedrals at home and abroad, while Idris, Bryn Estyn and Conway will have offered an enticing hint of Welsh exoticism.

Anyone of a religious disposition might have been pleased to reside at St Aubyn or St Brelade's, while several names alluded, with Dunroamin'-style whimsy, to the Forest at the end of the road: Oakdene and Beechcroft; Hawkhurst and Fernleigh; Woodlands and Elmhurst.

Two names on the 1901 census make little sense: Iving and Lowere. The enumerator may have made a spelling mistake, or the references have simply been lost over time.

As for my own family's house, it was called Sidon: the Greek name (meaning 'fishery') for the ancient Phoenician port city of Sidonia in today's Lebanon. Sidon was known for shipbuilding and its king was admiral of the fleet and successful in campaigns against the Egyptians in the 6th century BC and later against the Greeks. Given the occupation of our house's first owner [see 'Man of Sidon', left], it's an amazingly appropriate name.

If you'd like to follow the advice of the Telegraph and give your own house a name, there are several generators online. I tried, and the suggestions were mundane Road View, depressingly literal Brick House or an unwelcome reminder of our garden invaders, Fox's Bank. No thanks – I much prefer Sidon.

The London Street Guide project is looking at Bushwood

Tony Badicci is Founder of the London Street Guide, a project revealing the amazing stories behind London streets. He's currently looking at E11 and needs your help.

What's in a name? Well more than you could possibly imagine when you delve into the history of our streets.

Take a closer look and you can find everything from ancient landholders lords of the manor, honoured sons and daughters, descriptions, literary references, major battles, national heroes and even jokes.

Even in a relatively small area such as Bushwood, the names reveal our connections with the past.

Others from local worthies. John Drinkwater Close remembers the Leytonstone-born poet and dramatist known for a series of biographical plays of famous historical figures, including Abraham Lincoln and Oliver Cromwell.

Now largely forgotten he gave his name to a 1960s council tower block and now his name lives on in the eponymous close.

Ironically it is easier to find who Michael Road is named after. It was originally called Wellesley Road, after the principal name of the lords of Ruckholt and Wanstead manors, namely Pole-Tylney-Long-Wellesley. In 1949 it was renamed after Sir Michael Hicks, the Elizabethan Lord of the Manor.

Cookes Close is named after another former resident, John Cookes, the father of 14 children who lived at Lea Hall and Park House during the Restoration.

Then there is Harvey Road honouring Henry Martin Harvey, who a churchwarden of St John's the Baptist Church, who lived with his wife in a house on whose grounds this road is built.

But there are so many more, who were Joseph Ray or Mohmmad Khan who both have roads named after them?

The project started two years ago, although the idea behind it had been formed much earlier

It was simple, the capital's history doesn't stop at the Cities of London and Westminster. Why not tell it.

We decided to start with street names – after all, every street, road, avenue, path has one.

In time we will go further... Victorian murders, quirky facts, daring rescues, famous people, historical events and so on.

Little by little we plan to build up a people's history of this great city of ours.

And we hope by building a community of like-minded souls we can reach people who might otherwise find themselves alone.

So, if you are interested or have any suggestions please get in touch by email to tonybonnici@hotmail.co.uk and please check out the website www.londonstreetguide.com.

LONDON STREET GUIDE W1

CITY OF LONDON

A CHAPEL, A POND, A BAKERY - AND A FLOWERY PATH FROM BYGONE TIMES

hen it comes to the humble residential streets, there are fewer postcards to be found. I was pleased when I discovered this one of Cowley Road, now Lister Road. I'm intrigued that the sender has marked the house she's staying at (No 27) and she remarks that 'they have lovely gardens at the back'. That much hasn't changed! But look at the railings. Hedges are behind the metal rails and there's a double gate in front of Cowley House, presumably to allow access for a horse-drawn vehicle.

Trees too, are within the bounds of the front gardens (so, no 'street trees' yet, as we know them). The absence of any parked vehicles gives the road an open-air feel there's no municipal lighting either. This card was posted in 1908: hard to believe, but some of these houses were already over 30 years old by then, and everything about them looks sound and built to last. Over time, and into our own decade, successive residents have made changes, including the demolition of redundant chimney stacks, alterations to doorways and front paths, but superficially, much remains as was.

One major Leytonstone architectural feature that is now long gone, is that of the Methodist Church, also called the Wesleyan Chapel. This building once towered above the other rooftops in Leytonstone High Road, occupying a plot that extended down Lister Road to where we now see the church hall. On the other side of the road, where Hill's Garage was familiar in recent decades, is a purveyor of the flower trellises for which there was something of a vogue in Edwardian times.

I was fascinated by this postcard image of 'Green Man Pond, Leytonstone'. I never knew there was an expanse of water where the Henry Reynolds gardens are now – so that's why the pleasure gardens are below the road level! The skyline affords a view of the old Leytonstone Hospital site (now Tesco and other offices) - all is recognisable today. Going merely by the postcard, behind 'O'Neill's (once the Green Man pub), things are remarkably verdant - though all in faded sepia of course. Good longevity for a public house said to have been on the site since 1688!

I like when matches can be made. I have an image of Leytonstone

In the days when Leytonstone was in Essex, picture postcards were much collected - and they still are. Anita McCullough, a Bushwood resident of some 30 years, has some charming vintage examples picked up over the decades. Providing subtle clues mainly through remnants of architecture, these cards offer a glimpse of Bushwood residents' lives that long precede us. Anita describes some of her favourite images here.

This building once towered above the other rooftops in Leytonstone High Road, occupying a plot that extended down Lister Road to where we now see the church hall.

Road that features a gable wall advertisement for 'The Elms Bakery' and I pair it with a card posted in 1923, showing that the Elms Bakery and Café Restaurant was at 568 and 570 High Road Leytonstone. It appears that the establishment was a significant winner of awards in its time and the proprietor was called J H Buck.I wonder what their best sellers were? Anyway, long live the bakery and café-owners of Leytonstone, you are in good historical company it would seem.

My final favourite postcard is perhaps the most enigmatic. It's a blurred photograph to begin with. The vantage is that of a person venturing down a path bordered by fruit trees and perennial flowers. The title 'The Pastures, Leytonstone. The Green Walk begs the question: where WAS this lovely quiet 'walk' that fairly hums with the sound of busy bees and Cockney sparrows? It's possible that it represents the cutthrough alleyway between Davies Lane and Lister Road that now bears the name 'Pastures Path'. But it may just be a depiction of the mythical 'ley' route that di-vided the gardens of both those streets and linked Wanstead Flats with the High Road - there are no houses in the distance, so that bears out the surmise. But it's not enough to go on, so if anyone has a map of the right age, perhaps we can find out if 'The Green Walk' features there at all. In these multifarious byways of ours - stay curious, look up, seek beyond - and keep searching! Find that map.

McNeil's Giraffe: The African Sketches of a Scottish Postmaster

Anita's postcards interests extend a long way from E11. In the early 2000s, through philately and postal history collecting, she became interested in a small number of hand-drawn, self-made postcard examples she found from a Scotsman called Jim McNeil. They'd been sent from a tiny, yet strategic, colonial location in southern central Africa called Abercorn. 12 years of investigation and contextualisation of numerous personal histories in the Edwardian period has resulted in her book, published this month by The Rhodesian Study Circle. If you'd like to see/buy a copy, text Anita on 07962 936325.

A Library for 'things'

Inspired by similar projects around the world to reduce waste and build community, BARA, has decided to set up a Bushwood version of a Library of Things. James Cowen explains how it works

Have you ever needed a tool for a job that you will never use again? A tool that is too expensive to buy for one use that spends most of its life getting rusty in the shed and being home to some creepy crawly horror? If the answer is yes then maybe you need The BARA Libray of Things.

The library is a shared community resource of tools and household items that BARA members have agreed to offer to lend to other members for free. It works like a normal library but instead of books it is stocked with tools and household items.

Normally, share libraries need a premises and staff but we are doing away with the need for that by sharing the things we have and storing them where they already live - in our houses, lofts and garden sheds. The creepy crawly still has a home but only for a short let as those tools will now get used by more than just yourself. In return you get to feel good because you've done your community, your wallet and the planet a good turn.

For example, you might need a set of jump leads but don't want to buy a set or have anywhere to store them. Simply consult the library inventory, find the item by sorting the categories and contact the lender.

You can also add your own items, why not have a rummage through your garden shed or loft and see what useful items you have lying around. That old baby car seat might be useful for someone looking after their grandchildren for the weekend.

To get access to the BARA Library of Things you need to be a member of BARA and have an email registered with us. All you need to do is email BARAConnect@gmail.com to request access and we'll share the Google Sheet with you. The spreadsheet lists all the items you can borrow and the contact details to request them. You also have the ability to add your own items and contact details.

The inventory currently stands at nearly fifty items and includes a blood pressure monitor, a gas leak tester, a bike rack for a car, a trolley jack, sledgehammer, party cutlery and even a mens mountain bike.

The system works on trust so you probably don't want to share fragile, expensive and dangerous items and you are expected to treat other people's property with care and be responsible in offering to replace anything if it gets damaged.

The more things we share the more people will use it and the more we will save.

The First Customer

Andrew of Hartley Road became the first customer of the library,-

"I need to use a wallpaper steamer... Well, I could buy one-but when will I use it again? I could hire one-but will a suitable model be available when I need it and what will it cost? Or I could borrow one from the BARA Library of Things and, in return for a decent bottle of wine, walk round to a friendly neighbour, talk through how the device works and return it at a time that suits us both.

Joyce's steamer did the job brilliantly, saving both time and money. For a saving both time and money. For a weekend DIY task like redecorating a bedroom, the Library is a fantastic resource. I'll no doubt be accessing it again, and adding a couple of items myself."

Joyce said "I put a few things on our Library of Things and Andrew Shields got in touch to borrow my wallpaper steamer. Andrew popped round and took away the steamer and brought it back a few days later very pleased with how it had helped. And so was I. The system works. And he very kindly brought a bottle of red wine as a thank you. Not necessary but much appreciated."

Share your skills as well as your things

The Library of Things isn't the first share scheme in E11. The Waltham Forest LETS scheme has been trading in skills and services for years

For more than 20 years Waltham Forest residents have supported a local branch of the Local Exchange Trading System movement (LETS). LETS is a system for local people to trade goods and services without using money. Offerings include household repairs, music lessons, alternative therapies, gardening, computing, cooking, giving lifts, and dog-walking LETS programmes can be found across the globe. Each local LETS scheme has its own form of credit-based currency. In Waltham forest, the 270 LETS members exchange goods and services using 'Beams' – so named because the programme got its start at Walthamstow's legendary Hornbeam Café.

New members pay a one-off joining fee of £6 (£3 for those who are unwaged or on low incomes); after that all transactions are in the form of Beams. As one of the key features of LETS is encouraging community interaction, those who are interested in taking part are encouraged to sign up in person by attending the monthly Green Drinks from 8pm 15th of each month at the Walnut Tree pub or to attend a monthly sign up session from 10.30 - noon on the last Saturday of each month at the Hornbeam Café.

As you read this, spring should well and truly be licking her lips. No doubt we are all looking forward to daffodils and tulips and those long heady days of summer (between July 29th and August the 3rd). But at about this time the garden becomes a bit like Westeros with Game Of Thrones style battles waging between insects and plants. We have had yet another mild winter. There hasn't been enough of a cold snap to kill off the pests that enjoy our plants before we get the chance to. And the weeds haven't really stopped growing.

Even the smallest of gardens can host many hundreds of species of insects, mammals birds and plants. And as the sap rises and fecundity becomes the priority of all in the garden it is all too easy for us gardeners to think we have to reach for the bug sprays and weed killers to keep things in check.

But I beg you to reconsider. None of the pesticides that you can buy, in their all singing all dancing all murdering non biodegradable plastic bottles are actually of real benefit to your garden.

You see a healthy garden with all of those hundreds of species depends on a delicate balance of predators and prey and us all knowing which is which. For example the much-maligned earwig is actually one of the gardeners' biggest allies, eating aphids, codling moth, scale insect and almost all other pests that gardeners hate. Yet when we reach for the spray gun we kill the Earwigs too. In fact none of the sprays are selective- only killing the bugs we hate. There is blanket carnage. Butterflies and bees, lacewings and ladybirds and every other insect of benefit are all collateral damage.

So what can you do to keep order, reclaim balance and above all encourage more wildlife into the garden? More wildlife means more predators means less pests means more time to drink in the view while drinking the vino.

Firstly start with the soil. This is where the plants literally take root and healthy soil means healthy plants. A healthy plant is more robust, less susceptible to disease and less likely to succumb to pests. You can condition your soil with layer on layer of organic mulch such as horse manure or compost. The earth- worms will recycle the mulch under the ground over time and aerate the soil and improve drainage as well. And get this, you can top up the number of worms you have if numbers are low. Check out Wiggly Wigglers for all of your earthworm needs!!

None of the pesticides that you can buy, in their all singing, all dancing, all murdering, non biodegradable plastic bottles are actually of real benefit to your garden.

Secondly choose the 'right plant for the right place'. It's all that garden designers and gardeners bang on about. But it comes straight back to the healthy plant adage. And plant densely to crowd out the weeds. Weed killers such as Roundup and Path Clear contain the neonicotinoid glyphosate. Not only does it kill bees in droves, it is a carcinogen and due to its extensive use is found in much of our edibles. Food for thought?

Thirdly, plant a wide range of shrubs perennials, annuals and bulbs. Variety of flora encourages diversity and diversity encourages variety of fauna. If you can plant a tree do so. A single tree will support more wildlife than a meadow. Fourth, restock your predators. If you have been heavy on the chemicals in the past give them up. Then get yourself on-line and buy yourself some earwigs, earlth worms and ladybirds. Feed your birds as they chew on lots of the critters we don't like. Leave a couple of log piles discreetly in shady areas to encourage ground beetles, which will eat your slugs. Buy nematodes instead of slug pellets, which can get into the food chain and poison birds (and the family cat).

And the money shot? Dig yourself a pond... Frogs toads and newts will hoover up slugs and snails before they can become a problem and it will provide a nursery for hover fly larvae. Once hatched and in flight they are a very efficient pollinator.

Finally. Be forgiving. Accept that your garden is dynamic living organism and that it wont look like Sissinghurst. It will take a little while for the balance to restore, mainly because the life cycle of the pests is faster than the predators. But they will catch up. In the mean time if you really are struggling with aphids a little dot of washing up liquid in a water spray means that hands that do dishes can clean up your plants.

There truly is a battle for our environment. And it starts in our own back garden.

The current form of this 13 mile route between Gospel Oak and Barking, affectionately known as the Goblin Line has been shuttling people and freight around north east London since 1981. Originally created from an amalgamation of lines built in 1890 TFL took full control in Nov 2007, rebranded it as the Overground and added it to the tube map. The extra investment they put in made the line a serious commuting option due to its great links with the Victoria line.

Forever plagued with problems even in its early years it suffered threats of closure, lack of investment, delays and overloaded trains. More recently it has been delays with new trains, closures when the electrification was done incorrectly and in January this year there were closures when a freight train wrecked the tracks.

Despite all this, The Goblin Line, is a little gem and an amazing asset to the E11 transport options. It's so much more than just freight and work, it's also a gateway to a wealth of leisure activities. Did you know you're only 2 minutes from a city farm full of animals, only 5 minutes from a multplex cinema or 7 minutes from the biggest urban wetlands in Europe?

We've looked at the interesting and fun places that are only a few minutes away on the Goblin Line and recommend where to eat, where to have a pint and where you can let your kids run wild.

Shooting Bushwood

The BARA photography group is still going strong and with new member, Marc Sims, they're on the lookout to grow the group further.

When you take the time to stop, stare and take a photo, you realise that our area has many treasures. Every 6 weeks or so, members of the BARA Photography Group go out together to take photos. Previous locations have included Bushwood, Walthamstow Village, Victoria & Albert Museum, North Greenwich and Highgate Cemetery. We also take photos individually between meetings on an agreed theme. After each outing we meet to share our favourite pictures, and to help each other improve for next time! It's amazing to see the different interpretations of the same subject.

We are a small yet enthusiastic and sociable bunch. We are very keen for the group to grow. So if you love taking photos, would like to improve your photography skills and help others to improve theirs, come along to one of our meet-ups. We usually meet on Monday evenings.

So if you're interested in seeing London through a new lens contact Marc on 07885519255, to find out when and where we'll be meeting next.

See the BARA Social section of the BT on page 17 for more details on the BARA Photography Group plus details of other social groups running in the area.

Waltham Forest - Local Plan

Waltham Forest Council recently ran a workshop on 11 February at Leytonstone Library to discuss the next stages of their draft Local Plan. "The draft Local Plan intends to set out how the borough will meet the challenges of economic, environmental and social sustainability to ensure good growth and sustainable development. When finally adopted it will replace a number of other planning documents, so all planning policies are in one place. The borough has been seeking views on their ideas so far. The draft Local Plan recognises the different needs of different parts of the borough and has three sections covering the north, central and south areas of Waltham Forest.' BARA were invited to participate in the workshop for the south area of the borough at which details of the proposed plan were shared and discussed with local groups. We managed to secure three places for the event. BARA were keen to stress to planning officers the importance of a promoting a thriving local high road which should ideally start at O'Neills Public House and continue down to the traffic lights at the War Memorial. BARA's aim is to promote, where possible, new local shops and businesses which bring improvements and diversity to the current retail offering which would appeal to BARA residents.

Boundary Commission Review of Waltham Forest 2020

The Boundary Commission's recent review for the area of Waltham Forest closed on 2 March. The latest version took into account a number of submissions which attempted to change local ward areas with the aim of levelling out imbalances in the ratio of voters to Councillors. BARA are aware of submissions that attempt to spilt the BARA area seeing some of our roads go into Cann Hall ward. BARA made their own submission which we would be happy to share with members (on request). In our submission we have made a strong case for the BARA area to remain intact and ideally retained in the same electoral ward as Leytonstone High Road as we believe there is value in maintaining the BARA area within one single ward.

10 Harvey Road

A revised planning request was submitted in January and included a subdivision of the site to facilitate the construction of a 3 bedroom, two-storey house on the land to the rear of 10 Harvey Road (fronting the junction of Dacre Road and Carlton Road).

British Legion Site 698A High Road Leytonstone

A listed building consent has been submitted for the conversion of the building into six self-contained residential flats. Construction of mansard roof extension to front and rear roofs

Aylmer Hall

A change of use application has been submitted to alter Aylmer Hall from meeting hall (Class D1) to office/sewing studio (Class B1), incorporating the construction of three front and three rear dormer windows and installation of four roof lights to rear roof slopes. The application includes the alteration to fenestration at front elevation including re-instating of original arched windows to replace doors, installation of security railings to windows, replacement doors and new main entrance.

Haarts Estate Agents, 49-50 Church Lane

An application for the construction of an additional floor to a three-storey building to form an additional 2-bedroom self-contained flat.

London City Airport

London City Airport's draft master plan 2020-2035 consultation has now closed. BARA committee are now keen to understand whether recent decisions not to proceed with the third runway at Heathrow Airport may have any impact on any future decisions concerning London City Airport. Watch this space!

OUR MOST VALUABLE PLAYERS

The Woodhouse Players have been adding a regular cultural flourish to Leytonstone for 37 years. James Cowen sat down with veteran 'players' Ian and Jackie to find out why this little amatuer dramatics group brings so much to the area

I've always fancied having a go at acting but never trusted myself to remember the lines. As a child, the fear of freezing on stage and ruining the play in an epic scene of social awkwardness was unbearable. I thought it best to dodge the compulsory school plays any way I could and would then have to watch from the wings being supremely envious of Paul Mutlow's sublime Bob Cratchit. That was over 35 years ago but there still might be time to scratch that itch.

Friar Ivor Moody, the curate of St Margaret's Church, Woodhouse Road, had felt for a long time that Leytonstone needed its own drama group. In 1983, borrowing the name from a long defunct 1950s group, he, along with Vi Gostling, then the Chair, helped launch the Woodhouse Players with their first show, Once in a Blue Moon.

The Welsh Church has been their current home since 1989 and the amateur theatre group now boasts over 80 members from all over London and Essex, many of whom are Bushwooders.

With members as young as 14 and as old as 80 they pride themselves on the variety of the group and the varied range of plays they put on. Pantomimes, gritty social commentaries as well as some crowd-pleasing classics: the group aren't afraid to try anything.

They stage six plays per year, kicking off with a panto in January followed by a set of one-act plays in March. This coincides with the Waltham Forest Festival of Drama, a competition for one-act plays, and their productions often win awards in this competitive festival. Having won the Waltham Forest heat in 2014 with their spoof, Hamlet Part II, they qualified for the Welwyn Festival and placed second. Hamlet Part II was invited to the British Winners Festival at the Gaiety Theatre, Douglas, Isle of Man, where it got an excellent review.

TAKING RISKS

The other four shows are spread throughout the year and encompass everything from Shakespeare to edgy drama. It's not just wellknown plays: they like to take risks and to take on the avant garde or plays they've written themselves. Lesser-known plays can be tricky as they might not sell as many tickets.

They rely on ticket sales to pay the bills so popular plays like The Crucible and Macbeth are also staged as they will sell out.

Putting on a play can be costly as sets need to be built, costumes made, rent paid and rights to the play purchased. The main sources of income, apart from an occasional grant, comes through membership fees and ticket sales.

One of the most expensive plays was the Alan Bennett Talking Heads monologues: the rights cost £900 for three performances and it only starred three actors. There is a frequent requirement to put on plays with a larger cast as this can bring in a bigger audience. The Welsh Church has a capacity of 80 seats and is mostly sold out at each performance.

Unlike most drama groups where plays are selected by the committee or a director, at Woodhouse the plays are chosen by members. Anyone can put forward an idea for future shows and the options are voted on by all the members.

Community Liaison, Jackie Withnail, has been a member of the Players for 13 years. She says: "We see ourselves as a real community group and are aware of our community responsibilities. Our two latest plays cover mental health and we've made links with the local Mind group to provide information and references for inclusion in the programme. One performance of every play, normally the matinee, will have live signed support for the hearing impaired."

Ian, the current chair, is a relative newbie with seven years under his belt. He'd only done a bit of acting as a young man but once retired was looking for something that involved meeting people of mixed ages. Since joining he's acted, built sets and directed plays.

GETTING INVOLVED

You can get involved, too. Members can be involved as much or as little as they want and get to vote on which play the company does next. All new members are welcome, even if you are just curious and want to stay on the fringes. If you're not interested in acting but want to get hands-on then you could help with front of house, prop making, costumes or on the technical side with lighting and sound effects.

If you want to act in one of the plays, auditions are open to anyone that fits the casting requirements. The website lists roles and character descriptions for upcoming plays and anyone is welcome to come along and try out.

two nights a week working on the current play as well as preparing for future productions. Three plays are in progress at any time: one about to be performed, one in the early stages of organisation and casting, and one at the ideas stage.

You can also come to the regular play readings: details are published on the website. These are free and you come along and join in a reading or just listen. You don't have to sign up or pay anything and Jackie will give you a warm welcome and a cup of tea and a biscuit. The next reading is 17th March, and the play is Toad of Toad Hall. Jackie says: "A lot of people who come along don't necessarily want to be in a drama group but enjoy reading a play.' Membership costs £25 per year for a working person with £15 concessions for the unwaged, students and retired. It's great value – and you get free tea and coffee! BARA members get a free drink and a programme on performance night. The next production is three one-act plays: The Magic Tower, and Me and My Friends Acts 1 and 2. Catch them at the Welsh Church this month!

AND FINALLY...

I had to ask if they'd had any disasters during a performance. Jackie said: "Not a disaster but we did have a thief come in and steal some mobile phones during a Restoration play. He was spotted and the whole cast, dressed in full Charles II-style wigs, chased him down the High Road, led by Nell Gwyn followed by some people from the Star of India. We cornered him until the police came. It made the national press!"

The bees are back in town

Mornington Road's, Khalil and Salma, have been selling honey from their own bees to Bushwooders for years. Now they have rebranded as Bushwood Bees and sharing their skills and knowldege through a series of talks and tutorials.

As you may know myself and my wife Salma have been keeping honey bees for over a decade. We also train up new beekeepers and have given talks on bees to clubs, beekeeping associations and schools.

One thing we have not done to date is to give a beekeeping presentation to our friends and neighbours in Leytonstone. So with that in mind we have had discussions with Waltham Forest Council and they have kindly allowed us to give a beekeeping presentation on Monday 20th April between 5.30pm - 7pm at Leytonstone Library. This event will be free and open to everyone and anyone interested in learning about beekeeping.

Some of the topics we will cover include:

- History of beekeeping
- Types of bees
- Why keep Honey bees
- Honey bee Castes
- Stings
- How does a colony work
- Honey Production
- Honey Colour and taste
- Swarming
- Threats
- · Planting for bees

We will also be running beekeeping workshops during the May Half term for children at various Libraries around Waltham Forest. Details of this are being finalised.

Be great to see you on April 20th @ 5.30pm at Leytonstone Library, and look forward to finally having the opportunity to present this to our neighbours.

Transition Leytonstone

From its beginnings in 2009, from a discussion after a screening of an inspirational film, Transition Leytonstone has gone on to create awareness and inspire local projects that bring community together and reduce our reliance on fossil fuels. BARA committee member and Transition volunteer, Rosemary Warrington, explains

Transition Leytonstone is a community initiative which aims to make Leytonstone the best and most sustainable place to be. We care about the environment – and each other. We are all volunteers and are funded by grants, donations and running events. We aim to inspire people to start projects, run events, and develop new schemes. Over the past ten years several groups and projects have emerged. We share skills, run workshops, grow food, make things happen and have fun,

We have:

• A Community Garden in Harold Rd

by the footbridge open Saturdays and Tuesdays, 11 to 3

- Monthly Green Drinks at the Walnut Tree on the 15th from 8pm, Come and meet us in a relaxed setting
- A weekly local produce stall in partnership with OrganicLea outside Matalan every Saturday from 10 to 2.30,
- A Community Fridge and best before project outside the Methodist Church on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays from 12 to 1.30 or when the food runs out, Available to everyone on a pay what you feel or can afford (or not) basis
- · A transition library

Those of you who receive Fiona's regular emails will know there has been a significant amount of car crime in recent times in our area.

There were 13 motor vehicle crimes reported at the last meeting including theft from vehicles and interference/criminal damage to vehicles. We have not received the latest figures from the team as they were not available to attend the meeting on 24 February. Figures will be available for the next meeting to hopefully be arranged sometime in March.

Our neighbour Residents' association FARA have reported a recent incident of a catalytic converter being cut out of the car in full daylight one lunchtime.

Most of us know by now that electronic keys can be hacked into and should not be left unprotected or near the front of the house. They should be stored in Faraday pouch towards the back of the house and some people suggest the extra protection of putting them in a tin box.

Less of us probably know the extent to which a car is vulnerable to being hacked through programmes apparently available through the "dark web" side of the Internet. The thief then has access to all the programmes that for example a garage would have for that make of car. Thieves can be through the side window and plug their computer into a port maybe in the passenger well – how many of us knew we even had one of those? - and override all the factory security in seconds. This has happened in our area with the entire computer system for the whole car being cut out causing many thousands of pounds worth of damage. Therefore an alarm not fitted by the manufacturer should also be fitted. Other protections include fitting a "port blocker" to stop the thief accessing your car's computer system, having your number plate etched on the car windows, and use of the old-fashioned physical steering lock.

What can we as residents and neighbours do to help? Unfortunately the Safer Neighbourhoods police team have not replied to this member's request for help, and then got the date wrong and didn't turn up for their own Safer Neighbourhood meeting. Nevertheless the BARA committee do believe the police are taking car crime in our area seriously.

So, with no input from the neighbourhood police to offer as yet these are some thoughts.

- If we hear an alarm that only goes off for a few seconds we should not assume it is the owner accessing the car but should go out and check.
- The neighbours near where our own car is parked should have a contact number in case they hear our alarm.
- We should all keep an eye out for unknown or suspicious cars or activity in our area and all matters should be reported to BARA as well as to the police through contacting 101
- to the police through contacting 101 Something like a WhatsApp group for individual streets might be a useful way of quickly alerting our neighbours to suspicious activity in the street. This might also be a way to get more information following a crime which would lead to a better response from the police rather than what seems to be the usual present one which is that there is nothing they can do however serious the effect of the car or other crime.

Some of these issues were discussed at the recent Ward forum meeting with our councillors and hopefully there might be more ideas or help in the near future.

N

What is it about bread? A few simple ingredients plus some heat can create a smell that evokes such nostalgic feelings of comfort. We have a couple of bakeries in E11 already but there is plenty of room for more. Now, Dolce Patisserie is throwing their 'toque blanche' into the ring and they're excited at how its been going so far.

Dolce Pattiserie, run by Simona, is a real family business of master bakers with her husband, Adonis, her dad, Petrica, and her mother Nuti, all sharing the load.

It begins at 4am every morning to prepare the doughs for the daily bread and cakes. Simona and Adonis commute from Loughton and with two small children at home they juggle the long hours between the whole family.

This is their first foray into opening a shop and after a long search settled on Leytonstone which was home to Adonis for many years before setting up home in Loughton.

The shop and their produce have been constantly evolving over the first few months of opening as they have been cleverly responding to the demands of the local area. When they launched they stocked mainly Bulgarian pastries with the, Borek, a filo pastry parcel stuffed with cheese, meat or vegetables as their signature item. Since then they have been tweaking their cakes and breads after listening to their customers feedback.

They now produce eight vegan options including brownies, cookies and their best selling banana bread. They've also added two new gluten free products and plan to add more. All their products are natural with no additional addatives or colouring and are made daily on the premises.

Their bread is so good that it's often sold out by lunchtime and if you require something for a special occasion they also take orders for bespoke cakes for any event.

One Lister Road teenager was recently heard saying 'the vegan chocolate brownie is absolutely delicious and it's massive'

Responding to the needs of the customer appears to be a great way to build customer loyalty. As with Stone Mini Market two doors away, listening to customers and their ideas seems to really pay off.

Dolce Pattiserie have also become part of the BARA family and are now offering a 10% discount to members. Makes sure you have your up to date membership card with you.

Opening times are 8am until 7pm Monday to Saturday with 10am to 5pm on Sunday.
